Dr Liz Sheehan

Director of Sensory & Consumer Research for SRL

Our courses are taught by a team of sensory & consumer science professionals from across industry and academia. Led by Dr Sheehan, who has responsibility for leading the sensory and consumer science team at SRL, our Training Academy team of SMEs brings together the necessary skills and experience needed to provide our clients with the bespoke solutions they require.

The team have a broad range of research interests and experience, with academic, food & pharmaceutical industry partners both here in Ireland and globally, providing expertise that span many areas, including consumer foods & beverages, cereals, meat & fish, as well as a wide variety of dairy products, pet food, FSMP (Food for Special Medical Purposes), excipients, nutraceuticals, medicinal products (including APIs) and packaging.

Widely published in their own areas of expertise and using cutting-edge innovative methodology, SRLs Training Academy Team have delivered training solutions for our global clients that have proven time and time again to be an invaluable resource.

Liz has always had a particular interest in teaching and education and is mindful of the need to integrate current research and best practice into all of the SRLs' training.

In addition to being a guest lecturer in sensory & consumer science in the School of Food & Nutritional Sciences, University College, Cork for over 10 years, she has developed and provided a variety of bespoke sensory training courses to companies across the globe.
